It seems that when hotel customers consider hotels in Fukuoka, a key concern is the train station and location and perhaps the ability to walk to the station. Of course cost is a key concern. The internet shows up as one of the top 30 concerns as well.

The upper left side of this “map” shows that rooms are considered smaller but that perhaps the fact that there is internet shows that makes them more appealing (“nice”). It also appears that having a gym may have a strong association with “nice”. The “tub” may not have been as important a contributor to “nice” as “gym”. The lower left indicates that something about the “city” was perhaps “easy”

Although the conversation at both the “valley” and the “peak” is mostly positive, we may be able to point to some particularly positive talk about “Bachata” which was a musician who performed a number of times during this period. Tenjin seems to be an important factor in the positive peak as well. Also shopping at Canal City.

In the local valley the conversation is still positive. More tweets may be needed to discern additional information.
